Session description:

Green and intelligent logistics and transportation systems characterized by safety, efficiency, reliability and ecology are highly desirable but very complex. Although advanced technologies of information and communication have greatly pushed the modernization of logistics and transportation systems, the development of green and intelligent logistics and transportation systems is still a big challenge for the society. Novel management theories and data-oriented methodologies are keys to facilitating the green and intelligent logistics and transportation systems development.

This special session calls for novel theoretical or/and application contributions for achieving resource-efficient, sustainable, safe and reliable logistics and transportation systems for the benefit of all citizens and stakeholders.

Topics of interest include, but are not limited to:

- Novel theories and architectures on the design of transportation and logistics systems;
- Smart and sustainable logistics and transportation systems: theory and application models;
- Low carbon emission and resource-efficient logistics and transportation;
- Green mobility and intelligent transportation systems;
- Sustainable industry supply chains;
- Green public transportation system and urban parking management
